INDEX

TO THE

HUNDRED AND TWENTY-SECOND VOLUME

OF THE

North American Review.

America, 1776–1876, a series of articles on, 1, 228.

Bancroft, H. H., his account of Montezuma's dinner discredited, 265–308.

Chase, Chief Justice, article on, 337–357 — his conservatism as a statesman shown in the quality and mode of his opposition to slavery, 337–344 — his part in the formation of the Free-Soil party, 340 — legal and constitutional measures he urged to limit and destroy slavery, 342 — his eminent qualities and character as judge, 344–357 — tribute to Justice Catron, 345 — his position on the legal-tender question, 346–353 — his connection with the impeachment trial of President Johnson, 353–357 — political and partisan motives for the impeachment, 353 — his resolute insistence on his rightful claim as president of the court, 355.

Consular System, The, of the United States, article on, 309–337 — system, or no system, during first sixty years of government, 309 — act of 1856, 310 — system established in 1874, 311 — schedule of salaries, 312 — "consular clerks," 313 — vice-consuls and deputy-consuls, 315 — importance of post of vice-consul, legislation needed to secure it, 316–318 — consular passports, 318 — "consular agents," 319 — fees, 320 — paid into treasury by consuls, 322 — surplus of fees over consuls' salaries, 323, 324 — scanty allowances, 325 — inconvenience of giving vouchers in many cases, 326 — comparison between consular systems of Great Britain and United States, 327–329 — interpreters, marshals, etc., 329, 330 — sundry appropriations made by Congress for consular service, 331 — the "secret service fund," and the law for its expenditure, 332 — the Neutrality Act, 332–335 — promotion in the consular service desirable, 355 — advantages of having consuls appointed for service wherever needed, and not for one special location, 336.

Cutler, Dr., and the Ordinance of 1787, article on, 229–265 — territory covered by the ordinance, 229 — character of the ordinance, 229 — efforts in Indiana, Ohio, and Illinois to secure slavery, 231 — Daniel Webster's estimate of the ordinance, 233 — Judge Timothy Walker's, 233 — Chief Justice Chase's, 234 — its authorship ascribed by Webster to Nathan Dane, 234 — by Benton and Hayne, to Jefferson, 235 — by Charles King, to Rufus King, 235 — Mr. Dane's letters, claiming the authorship, 236 — Mr. Force's statement, 237 — various plans or ordinances brought forward for government of the Northwestern Territory, 237–244 — by Jefferson's committee, in 1784, 237–239 — Rufus King's resolution in 1785, 239 — Monroe's committee, in 1786, 240–244 — new committee appointed July 9, 1787, 244 — Dr. Manasseh Cutler, 246 — the "Ohio Company of Associates," and his agency for it, 246, 247 — his learning and personal accomplishments, 248 — his popularity with Southern men, 249 — his social opportunities and agency in framing the Ordinance of 1787, 251–254 — its passage through Congress, 255 — Nathan Dane's apparent nonappreciation of its importance, 256 — close connection between the Ordinance of 1787 and the Ohio purchase, 257 — Mr. Dane's writings and notes concerning the ordinance, 257–260 — traditions and evidence in the Cutler family of Dr. Cutler's hand in the ordinance, 260–263 — Dr. Cutler's insistence upon grants of land for education, 262 — his organization of Ohio University, 263 — his sons, 261–264 — his biography in preparation, 264.

Dane, Nathan, his connection with the framing of Ordinance of 1787, 236–260.

Darwin, Charles, his Insectivorous Plants, critical notice of, 425–437.

Education in America, 1776–1876, article on, 191–228 — President Grant's suggestion of a constitutional amendment respecting education, 191 — Mr. Blaine's proposed amendment, 192 — principal sources of information concerning development of American system of education, 193 - 196 — reports and circulars of Bureau of Education, 193 — Barnard's American Journal of Education, 193, 194 — foreign reports, essays, etc., 195 — primary schools, their prevalence and generally homogeneous character, 196 - 212 — their value and origin, 196 — order adopted in Massachusetts, November 11, 1647, 197 — Constitution of Massachusetts, article drafted by John Adams, 198 — adoption of system in other States, 199 - 201 — President Dwight's observations, 201 — Barry's picture of Massachusetts schools, 201 — State supervision adopted, 203 — general characteristics of primary schools, 203 - 205 — the religious problem, its difficulties, dangers, and possible solutions, 205 - 209 — W. T. Harris's defence of American system of education, 209 — ignorance of freedmen at South a serious obstacle, 210 — summary of chief features and statistics, 211, 212 — secondary education, its institutions and inadequacy, 212 - 214 — colleges, 214 - 221 — nine colleges founded before 1776, their objects and character, 214 - 216 — large multiplication since, 216 — many weak, but nearly all beneficial, 217, 218 — recent changes in American university education, 219 - 221 — professional education, law, medicine, theology, 222 — science, agriculture, 223 — instruction of the deaf and dumb, blind, etc., Dr. Gallaudet, 225 — Dr. Howe, 226 — public libraries, 226 — general conclusions, 227.

Gilder, Richard Watson, his The New Day, critical notice of, 458.

Hertslet, Edward, his The Map of Europe by Treaty, critical notice of, 452.

James, Henry, Jr., his Roderick Hudson, critical notice of, 420 - 425.

Johnson, Andrew, character of, 353.

Lathrop, G. P., his Rose and Rooftree, critical notice of, 456 - 458.

Law in America, 1776 - 1876, article on, 154 - 191 — differences in geographical peculiarities of England and America, 159 — different laws resulting therefrom, — navigability of rivers, and riparian rights, 160 - 164 — waste and user, 165 — subjection of lands to payment of debts, 166 — facility of alienating land in America, 167 — peculiarities of American law due to the political character and history of the nation, 168 - 171 — abolition of right of primogeniture, 170 — of law requiring title by descent to be derived from person last seized, 170 — peculiarities of American law due to American intellectual life, 172 - 187 — reform in criminal law, 173 — legislation for education, 173 — tendency to organic statute law, or written constitutions, 174 - 178 — to codification of laws, 178 - 181 — codification not hostile to progress, 179 — John Austin's testimony thereto, 180 — courts of common law and equity, their differences and gradual assimilation, 181 - 184 — Laussat's Essay on Equity in Pennsylvania, 183 — simplification of methods of legal procedure, — abolishing variety of forms of actions, and substituting a statement and answer for the English system of pleading, 185 - 188 — doctrine of Uses and Trusts, 188 — reform in law of real property, 190 — law in this country has become more simple, more humane, and more adaptive, 191.

Lloyd, Watkiss, his The Age of Pericles, critical notice of, 465 - 468.

Lorne, Marquis of, his Guido and Lita, critical notice of, 464.

Miller, Joaquin, his The Ship in the Desert, critical notice of, 461 - 464.

Montezuma's Dinner, article on, 265 - 308 — great sensation produced in Europe by first accounts of Mexico, 265 — untrustworthiness of all Spanish (or other) works on the Aztec social system and government, 265 - 272 — Bancroft's Native Races of the Pacific States extravagantly absurd, 266 — no science of American ethnology, 268 — Indians in West India Islands, Central and South America, Florida and Mexico, all of same race, and having same organization, 270 — organization of Indians in gentes, phratries, and tribes, 273 - 281 — the gens, its chief and rights, 273 - 275 — the phratry, 275 — tribe and confederacy, 276 — probability of Aztec organization on this system, 277 - 281 — ownership of lands in common, 281, 282 — their law and practice of hospitality, 282 - 284 — their communism in living, 284 - 286 — communal character of their houses, 286 — their one prepared meal a day, 287 — the custom under which the men ate first, the women and children afterwards, 288 - 308 — Robertson's and Herrera's statements, 288 — description of the Mexican houses by Cortes, Diaz, and others, 289 - 291 — Montezuma's "palace," 294, 295 — Mr. Bancroft's description, 296 — Montezuma's dinner and its service, according to Diaz, Cortes, and Herrera, 297 - 303 — Mr. Bancroft's gorgeous picture of it, 304 - 306 — Montezuma's dinner, as it probably was, 306, 307.

Ordinance of 1787, its authorship, 229 - 265.

Politics in America, 1776 - 1876, article on, 47 - 87 — great interest in political speculations a century ago, 47 — principles or bonds of union of the earliest American Democratic party, 48, 49 — of the Federalist party, 49 — three evils inherited under the Constitution from the old system, 50 — difference between a constitutional republic and a democracy, 51 — tendency in America to make the Republic democratic, 52 — blunders of the Federalists, 54 - 56 — withdrawal of the ablest men from political life, 55 — the Republican party under Jefferson as leader, 57 - 60 — Jefferson's love of philosophizing, 58, 59 — his aggrandizement of the power of the executive, 60 — the War of 1812, 61 — the "era of good feeling" prolific in calumnies and personal scandals, 61 — Jackson's candidacy, 62 — relentless opposition to J. Q. Adams's administration, 63 — doctrines propounded at Washington that have been developed in the States, 64 — great inventions, their effect on political action, 64 — development of political machinery during first quarter of present century, 65 — new system inaugurated by Jackson, "to the victors belong the spoils," 67 — substitution of conventions for the caucus, 68 — disaffection respecting tariff and banks, 70 — the "Loco Foco" party, 71 — Van Buren's administration, 72 — election of Harrison, Tyler's policy, Webster's statesmanship, 73 — Southern politicians united, slavery made an issue in American politics under Polk, 74, 75 — political results of war with Mexico, 76 — moral power of Abolitionists, destruction of Whig, then of Native American party, 77 — movement in favor of equality, 78 — new elements introduced with the Republican party and the election of Lincoln, 79 — perplexing questions to be settled after the civil war, 80 — people now shun responsibility, and seek guaranties of honesty and efficiency in their rulers, 81 — the "Boss" system, its growth and perfection, 82, 83 — timidity and low character of Congress, 84 — the political tone of the nation not degenerating, 85 - 87.

Preston, Margaret J., her Cartoons, critical notice of, 459 - 461.

Religion in America, 1776 - 1876, article on, 1 - 47 — close connection of political and religious ideas in American history, 1 — ecclesiastical and theological convulsions of last hundred years, 2 — connection between religion and the state in all the colonies before Revolution, 4 - 9 — process and causes of separation between religion and the state during past hundred years, 9, 10 — leading denominations in 1776, 12 - 22 — Congregationalists, their polity, respectability, authority of clergy, 12 - 15 — Baptists, 15 - 17 — Episcopalians, their loyalty to Great Britain, 17, 18 — Presbyterians, their origin, culture, hearty patriotism, 18 - 20 — Reformed Dutch, Lutheran, and German Reformed, and other sects, 20 - 22 — President Stiles's prophetic vision of the glory of the Congregationalists and Presbyterians, 22 — relative strength of leading denominations in 1876, 22 - 24 — widespread reaction against dogmatic apprehension of Christianity, 24 - 30 — growth and vital power of Methodism, 25 - 27 — Baptists, simplicity of creed, democratic polity, 27, 28 — change in Congregationalism, transcendentalism, 28 — Council of 1865, 29 — Oberlin Council 29, 30 — value of established polity shown in history of Presbyterians, 32 — some causes of weakness in Congregationalism, 33 — American tendency to accentuate ecclesiastical distinctions, — the Episcopal church, 34 - 37 — growth of Roman Catholic church, its demands respecting public schools, 38 - 40 — church taxation, 40, 41 — religious culture in America a century ago theological, 42 — next phase ethical, Channing its representative, 43 — present phase æsthetic, shown in church architecture, elaborate music, ritual, 44 - 46.

Reumont, Alfred von, his Lorenzo de' Medici il Magnifico, critical notice of, 437 - 446.

Science, Abstract, in America, 1776 - 1876, article on, 88 - 123 — differences in special faculties between people whose general powers are equal, 89 — sagacity of English mind, analytical superiority of Continental, 90 — one-sidedness of Americans, 91 — utility no measure of value of scientific research, 93 — Franklin, 93 — scientific investigations rarely pursued successfully by isolated men, 94 — Rittenhouse, 95 — grant of four hundred dollars by Legislature of Pennsylvania to Philosophical Society, 95 — general lack of scientific study during first half of this century, 96 — whether scientific men in posse were born in America then, 97 — hereditary genius, 98 — excellent work done by Bowditch, 99 — Henry, 100 — Bache, 100 — aid given by European governments to promote science, 102 — one instance of American government feeling need of a scientific advisory body, 102, 103 — National Academy of Sciences, its absurd charter, 103 — weather reports of Army Signal Office, 104 — Coast Survey, its important achievements, 105 — government surveys, 106 — considerable activity in science since 1840, Agassiz in biology, Mitchel in astronomy, 107 — observatories, 108 — meagreness of American scientific literature, 109 — its excellent quality, 110 — scantiness of means to support scientific journals and to publish transactions of learned societies, 110, 111 — difference between American and foreign scientific associations, 112 - 114 — determination of longitude between Greenwich and Paris by American Coast Survey, 114 — American weakness in political economy, 116 — our scientific deficiencies, their causes and possible remedies, 118 — need of exact thought, 122, 123.

Science, Economic, in America, 1776-1876, article on, 124-154 — political economy of to-day founded by Adam Smith in 1776, 124 — great attention paid to it by public men of Europe, 124 — growth and development of United States very important in economic history of the world, — cotton, gold, tobacco, railroads, 125-128 — fine opportunity for investigating and applying economical principles in America, 129 — desultory character of Franklin's studies in political economy, 129 — value of Hamilton's writings, 130 — Jefferson and Madison, 131 — Calhoun, 132 — Clay, Webster, and their contemporaries, 133 — moderate value and permanence of writings on political economy by the scholars of America, 134-140 — A. H. Everett, 134 — Dr. Cooper, Willard Phillips, Wayland, Vethake, 135 — Bowen, Colwell, Walker, Perry, 136 — Carey, 137-140 — the currency question, 140-145 — United States banks, 141 — specie the only national currency from 1846 to 1862, 142 — ignorance of financial questions in Congress during the war, 143 — strongly practical direction given to all American pursuits, 146 — value of certain pamphlets discussing practical problems, 147 — circumstances favorable to neglect or disregard of economic study and practice in America, 148-151 — necessity yearly growing more imperative for careful investigation of laws of political economy, 152-154.

Sidgwick, Henry, his The Methods of Ethics, critical notice of, 446-452.

Stevens, Thaddeus, hatred of shams and love of decency, 357.

Story, W. W., his Nero, critical notice of, 454-456.

Taxation, Local, The Reform of, article on, 357-408 — no attention given to politico-economic subjects by people of United States before the war in 1861, 358 — important questions forced on public attention since the war, 359, 360 — reports of Commissioners of Taxes in New York on local taxation, 361 — general idea to tax everything, 363 — impossibility and injustice of this plan, 363-376 — intolerableness of personal inquisitions, 364 — intangibleness of most personal property, 365 — where shall be the situs of movable property for assessment, 367 — discrimination between foreign and resident stockholders, 368 — artificial distinction between real and personal property, 369 — unequal taxation in different States, 370 — futility of requiring persons to report all items of personal property, 371 — decisions of United States Supreme Court, 372-375 — how the present system is regarded by competent judges, 377 — examples of reform and improvement of system of taxation in France, 378-380 — in England, 380-382 — public needs to understand that nothing cannot be something, 382 — titles are not property, 383 — decisions of California Supreme Court, 384-386 — remarkable report of the Massachusetts Tax Commissioners, 388-390 — experiment of Philadelphia and Montreal, 391 — how taxation is distributed over all classes, 390-395 — striking arguments and illustrations of sound system of taxation in pamphlet by Enoch Ensley, 395-400 — popular resistance to unjust laws, 401 — failure to assess personal property under present system, 402.

Tyndall, John, his Sound, critical notice of, 403-419.

PUBLIC LIBRARY OF THE CITY OF BOSTON

Cambridge: Printed by Welch, Bigelow, & Co.